

The Challenge: Your boss asks you to create microlearning on PowerPoint?

What do we have? Two slides full of text.

You want to make this interactive, but you don't have access to Adobe Products or Articulate.

What do you do?

The Solution: You create an interactive PowerPoint.

Your redesign contains:

- a statistic to grab students' attention,
- a situation faced by Vanessa, a new instructional designer,
- an office where you can click items to explore various copyright topics, and
- the copyright challenge to check student knowledge.

What is the copyright challenge?

- This is a branching scenario.
- It's an interactive game show complete with sound effects and animation.
- Learners receive feedback based on decisions they make.

Download a copy of the interactive PowerPoint, explore the interactive office, and take the Copyright Challenge
